“Motion capture data had been used previously in sports video games and F1 simulation software, but FIFA is the first football game to use real-time motion capture data to recreate the game-play experience,” says David Rutter, creative director on FIFA 22. “The replays you see in a football match are not from an imaginary game, but from a real, real match. We wanted to make sure the data that goes into the game is real and accurate.” [via EA Sports Blog] To comment on this article and other PCWorld content, visit our Facebook page or our Twitter feed.

Positive and negative inotropic effects of adenosine and adenosine analogues in the canine heart. The relative inotropic actions of adenosine (adenosine-5'-triphosphate), isobutyladenosine and 8-phenyltheophylline on canine right atria were examined. Isobutyladenosine and 8-phenyltheophylline produced dose-related positive inotropic actions with an ED50 of 28 microM and 3.5 microM, respectively. Adenosine-5'-triphosphate was approximately 10-fold more potent than the adenosine analogues. Adenosine and isobutyladenosine did not affect atrial rate, but markedly reduced the chronotropic responses produced by 0.1 microM isoproterenol. Isoproterenol (0.1 microM) had no effect on the intrinsic heart rate. It is concluded that isobutyladenosine and 8-phenyltheophylline have a potent positive inotropic action but adenosine-5'-triphosphate has a relatively weak positive inotropic action.
